

The True and Terrifying Story of the Yellow Fever Epidemic of 1793 Philadelphia

In the summer of 1793, the city of Philadelphia was gripped by a devastating yellow fever epidemic that killed thousands of people. The epidemic began in late July, when a ship carrying refugees from the Caribbean arrived in the city. The refugees were infected with yellow fever, and they soon began to spread the disease to others. Within weeks, the epidemic was out of control, and people were dying in the streets.

The yellow fever epidemic of 1793 was one of the worst epidemics in American history. It is estimated that between 5,000 and 10,000 people died in Philadelphia alone. The epidemic also had a devastating impact on the city's economy and social fabric. Many businesses were forced to close, and the city's population declined by nearly half.
